CHURCH THREAT LEVEL – URGENT

THIS IS RAW INTELLIGENCE

On 18 Jan 2026, during church services at Cities Church, located at 1524 Summit Ave, St. Paul, MN 55105, <https://www.citieschurch.com/> a large crowd of anarchists entered the sanctuary and interrupted services There are unconfirmed reports of two separate in both Minneapolis and Saint Paul. The Racial Justice Network and former CNN Reporter Don Lemon escorted the attackers, which they livestreamed on YouTube. The church appears to be selected and against Pastor David Easterwood, who they say is also the acting ICE field office director in Minnesota.

Protestors could be heard chanting, “Hands up, don’t shoot” and “ICE out” throughout the video. According to Lemon, the protestors interrupted the opening prayer of the Sunday worship service. The protestors were alleging one of the church’s pastors was a member of Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) within the Department of Homeland Security, Lemon said in that video. Fired CNN anchor Don Lemon live streamed the incident with critics accusing Lemon of issuing threats to ICE supporters , Christians, and churches about what’s to come: “This is the beginning of what’s going to happen here,”

Eyewitnesses say the agitators burst into the sanctuary and started shouting Renee Good's name – Good is the woman that was shot and killed by an ICE agent after she allegedly tried to run him over with her vehicle. The agitators then refused to leave even though church leaders repeatedly asked. Lemon claimed that he was just a "journalist" and not an activist, however many are questioning how Lemon knew the anti-ICE agitators were going to storm that specific church at that exact time.

Democrat activists are now using doxxing information to send protesters to ICE agents homes

Reporter stands up to them, “What do you guys think protesting in front of an alleged ICE house is gonna do — Do you guys think that it's okay to harass someone's house where they live, where their families live? — Do you think it's remotely okay?”

‘Radical protesters are now invading the homes of our heroic ICE agents and their families, fueled by the doxxing of nearly 4,500 agents — These agitators abandoned peaceful protest long ago.’

The screenshot shows a chat window with a question and a response. At the top, there are buttons for 'Ask' and 'Imagine'. The question is: 'Can a U.S. citizen prevent another U.S. citizen from worshipping God at a church service?'. The response is under the heading 'Thoughts >' and provides a legal analysis. It states that generally, a private U.S. citizen cannot legally prevent another U.S. citizen from worshipping at a church service if it involves force, threats, or other coercive means, as this could violate federal criminal law under 18 U.S.C. § 247. It also notes that such actions might constitute state-level crimes like assault, battery, harassment, false imprisonment, or trespassing. The response then discusses important nuances based on context, providing two scenarios: 1) If the 'preventing' citizen is a church leader or authorized representative (e.g., pastor, board member), they can legally refuse entry or remove individuals from services. 2) If the 'preventing' citizen is unaffiliated with the church (e.g., a protester, family member, or random individual), they have no legal authority to block access, and attempting to do so could lead to criminal charges. The response concludes by stating that the First Amendment primarily protects religious exercise from government interference, not private actions, and advises consulting a lawyer for real situations.

Ask Imagine

Can a U.S. citizen prevent another U.S. citizen from worshipping God at a church service?

Thoughts >

Generally, no, a private U.S. citizen cannot legally prevent another U.S. citizen from worshipping at a church service if it involves force, threats, or other coercive means, as this could violate federal criminal law under 18 U.S.C. § 247, which prohibits intentionally obstructing someone's free exercise of religious beliefs through force or threat of force (including threats against religious property). law.cornell.edu Such actions might also constitute state-level crimes like assault, battery, harassment, false imprisonment, or trespassing, depending on the circumstances and jurisdiction.

However, there are important nuances based on context:

- If the “preventing” citizen is a church leader or authorized representative (e.g., pastor, board member): Yes, they can legally refuse entry or remove individuals from services. Churches are considered private property, and religious organizations have broad authority under the First Amendment’s Free Exercise Clause to control who attends, including excluding disruptive individuals, non-members, or anyone for any reason (even reasons that might otherwise be discriminatory in public settings, like race or gender, due to exemptions from certain civil rights laws). @pastor-church-law quora.com justanswer.com reddit.com christianschristianity.quora.com Courts have upheld this, noting there’s no constitutional right to worship on private property without permission, and government intervention could violate the church’s religious freedoms. avvo.com For example, a church can obtain a court order to bar someone disruptive from the premises. @pastor-church-law
- If the “preventing” citizen is unaffiliated with the church (e.g., a protester, family member, or random individual): They have no legal authority to block access. Attempting to do so physically or through intimidation could lead to criminal charges under the aforementioned federal statute or local laws. Peaceful expression of disagreement (e.g., protesting outside) is protected by the First Amendment, but it cannot cross into obstruction or threats. uscourts.gov supreme.justia.com

The First Amendment primarily protects religious exercise from government interference, not private actions. justice.gov uscourts.gov Private disputes might be resolved through civil lawsuits (e.g., for interference with religious rights), but outcomes depend on specifics like whether the church is involved or if discrimination laws apply (churches often have exemptions). americanbar.org If you’re facing a real situation, consult a lawyer familiar with religious liberty or civil rights law in your state.

NEW: Don Lemon tries lecturing a pastor on the First Amendment after a mob of far leftists stormed a church in Minneapolis.

Pastor: “This is unacceptable. It’s shameful to interrupt a public gathering of Christians in worship..”

Lemon: “Listen, there’s a constitution, the First Amendment to freedom of speech and freedom to assemble and protest.”

Pastor: “We’re here to worship Jesus because the hope of the world is Jesus Christ..”

Lemon: “But did you try to talk to them?”

Pastor: “No one is willing to talk. I have to take care of my church and my family so I ask that you would also leave this building.”

Imagine storming a church mid worship and thinking you are the good guys.
